

What brought about this creative exploration:

I wanted to create something that could describe the way music made people feel in a creative way so I went about painting with gouache. Since music is often paired with colors and the composition of color, I wanted to try a similar technique. With this creative exploration, I also learned more about gouache as I've only tried using it two other times. I think I'll use it more because of this creative exploration. With each piece I wanted to describe the person and what they described as their favorite kind of music. If you noticed that there are four pieces instead of just three, I also included myself as a way to compare and contrast how music looks — this also goes with the initial topic as I started off wanting to compare how music makes people feel and what kinds of music they like. Overall, I believe I accomplished describing each person using both their favorite colors, favorite kinds of music, and their values.
